

History/Social Science at Home Infants (Birth - 15 mos.)

How Children Learn

Infants learn about history and social science through their experiences and relationships. They are learning about the people who are important to them and the role that these caregivers play in their lives.

Activities & Experiences

Show infants their own face in a mirror.

Look at pictures of family members or other babies.

*Read books with photos of real people.

Provide soft dolls or puppets with blankets and bottles, and model feeding or taking care of them.

Take a walk and explore your neighborhood--the buildings, people, and nature!

How can we support exploration and social-emotional learning?

- Talk about the routine and keep it consistent.
- Build the relationship with your child by talking and playing with them.
- Describe the object of the infant's attention.

It's bath time!

Auntie is helping you press the buttons on the toy!

Look at your hands. You're moving your fingers!
